The Windows XP SP2/SP3 and Windows Vista Trojan.Win32.Agent Program This Trojan alerts Windows users when a PC system is infected by a dangerous virus. When the system is infected, the Trojan sends live e-mail messages to a number of e-mail addresses held in a private database. The Trojan can also delete files, send files and change system settings. Typical symptoms of infection include clicking and reading e-mail messages to which the virus notifies the user, reading of unwelcome e-mails containing decryption keys for files, change of settings on the PC, and the activation of Web connections. The Trojan is often transmitted in e-mail messages sent from unknown senders, which are believed to have been sent in bulk from compromised user accounts. Additionally, infected users can download Trojans which in turn generate e-mail messages that are sent out by the Trojan. This explains why an e-mail message containing the Trojan will come from an unknown sender. How to Remove the Trojan To remove Trojan.Win32.Agent from the system, please follow the steps below: 1.
